

Empowerment Technologies, a new subject introduced in Senior High School, possesses some real fear for students like. As I was dealing with it, I consider it as a struggle in general. The tasks given unto us were series. After an activity or a project, another one would be given. As a result, it took much of my time, effort, and energy. I was also frustrated at some point due to unending projects and as we were also bombarded with lots of projects on the other subject given spontaneously to be passed at the same time. However, I came to realize that this subject is very significant in my life not just as a growing student but also as a citizen aspiring to become one of the stable professionals someday. This subject has taught me various lessons such as media, information and computer literacy, utilization of technologies and the like. I have also learned the values of discipline, determination, and time management. Actually, I am not skillful enough in terms of computer stuffs that's why this subject really tested my skills and patience to improve and become better. I see it as a challenge that has to be surpassed and not as a hindrance. I give it an overall good impression as it has made me understood and realized the essence of facing fears and dealing the struggles to overcome them.

This subject came to answer some of my questions in mind before. I was thinking before how do people create content in the internet such as news and blogs. And through this subject, I discovered how to create or post blogs and advocacy with the use of internet. I found it very interesting but at the same time challenging as your skill as a writer would be tested and internet has a lot of restrictions. Moreover, I also discovered that I am capable of standing in front of other people specifically to the kids and I acquire the ability to lead and impart knowledge and lessons to the younger students about our chosen advocacy. As days pass by, problems naturally occur. One of the problems include lack of initiative and ability of my groupmates to exert much effort to help in our group tasks. Procrastination within us also adds up to my pressure and stress as our teacher demands for a very good outcome.

Some of the challenging moments I have encountered is when we were tasked to create a blog. I can say that it was the most challenging for me because I find it hard since I am not really fond into reading and making blogs. I also struggled in terms of resources since I do not own a laptop and our internet is too slow so it made me hard to create one. My group expected a good outcome for the blog but due to poor communication personally and in messenger, I think we were unable to meet our own expectations and the standards of our teacher. On the other hand, I made it possible to create a blog with the help of my brother that has the experience of creating contents in the internet. I also researched information to help solve those struggles.

The most important thing I learned personally is not to be lazy. If you can do it now, don't wait for tomorrow. Because you will not know what tomorrow will bring. I also learned the importance of time management through inculcating discipline. I realized that we must prioritize things and learn to capitalize on strengths and overcome weaknesses since we all have a God given wisdom. These lessons will be applied in real life situations in order for people to become productive because we won't be able to achieve our own goals in life if we will continue the practice of indolence. Thus, we need to work hard and give it our best shot in every circumstance to reach the desired goals and the fruit of success.
