

My personal review on this semester

As the semester is finally over my overall experience was rough, projects were hard to pull off but when I succeed in it I get to learn many things about it.

My personal thoughts on this semester were a mix of positives and negatives, because some projects are hard to achieve but when you achieve it you'll be relieved and gain knowledge at the same time.

My most interesting discoveries while making the projects were on how they connect and help people to do the right things, and on how it changes the mindset of some through advocacies we've made.

There was a moment that was very challenging to us because some of the project's deadlines were so short and we had so much to do in that certain project that it cannot be accomplished at a short amount of time given to us.

I've learned that through hardwork, you can do the impossible and achieve anything if you just believe in yourself.

But the most important thing I've learned was if you need to do something, then just do it rather than waiting for someone to do it for you.

The ultimate problem I've faced was when there is little time left for a project to be submitted, my final best solution was to finish it even if it will take my time in sleeping.

I feel my solutions are kinda related to the real world problems because today even if there is little time left to finish something, the only thing that we can do as humans is to try and finish it.

When I'm in a team I sometimes do well and sometimes don't because I had a lot of different teams in this semester, some of my team really did well on communicating while other teams I've been still need improvement in terms of communication with one another.

And lastly, even if I do well sometimes on these projects, my collaborative communication fell one time when I was given a task to be finished but instead I procrastinated and let my team down, I was guilty and learned a lesson out of it which is never procrastinate again.

(But maybe I'll do it again but with good reasons this time.)
